Inspired by growing up at the Outer Banks, Izzie plans to major in environmental science at Carolina, where she’ll be the first in her family to go to college. During high school, Izzie played three types of saxophone, worked at Starbucks to help pay for her extracurricular activities, and learned to blaze her own trail.

"Being surrounded by opportunity excites me the most about Carolina, and being surrounded by people who are just as eager to embrace the opportunities that are being provided to them."

THEY’VE TRAVELED DIFFERENT PATHS

MEET ABEL MIRANDA

Abel grew up without health insurance, which meant skipping doctor visits and avoiding injuries by not playing on the middle school football team. Illness or injury could have turned his family’s world upside down. Abel hopes that transferring to UNC after serving five years as a Marine Corps medic will set him on his path toward medical school and help him lift that burden for other families.

“I feel like it’s a responsibility to take these things that I’ve been lucky to learn in my life and put them to good use.”
